

ANAMBRA GOVERNORSHIP ELECTION 2025

A SAFETY AND PROFESSIONAL ADVISORY FOR JOURNALISTS

A publication by the Safety and Protection of Journalists' hub of the International Press Centre (IPC)

INTRODUCTION

Based on figures from the Independent National Electoral Commission (INEC), about five hundred and eight (508) journalists have been accredited to cover the Anambra Governorship election on Saturday November 8, 2025.

The International Press Centre (IPC), Lagos-Nigeria is concerned about the safety of these journalists and other media professionals who essentially will be on frontline duty during the elections.

This advisory is therefore being published with the objectives of:

- Promoting the personal safety of journalists covering the Anambra governorship election and subsequent ones;
- Ensuring that journalists covering the elections are fully equipped with knowledge on safety precautions to take while on the field;
- Ensuring professionalism in the coverage and reportage of the governorship election and subsequent ones; and
- Complementing national and international standards for reporting electoral processes and elections.

The advisory notes that the Nigerian Media Code of Election Coverage has already tasked the government, particularly the law enforcement agencies and the political parties to take measures to protect journalists and provide the enabling environment for them to perform their onerous responsibilities during the campaigns and elections.

They are hereby reminded not to shirk this responsibility, and we particularly call on all law enforcement and security agencies that would be on election duty on Saturday and subsequently, to refrain from threatening, molesting, arresting or detaining any of the 508 journalists who have been duly accredited by INEC to cover the elections.

Pursuant to the above, the International Press Centre (IPC) through its Safety and Protection of Journalists hub has established an ELECTION-DAY-JOURNALISTS' SAFETY-ALERT-DESK as part of its Safety of Journalists and Press Freedom work for the purpose of receiving information or complaints and taking action on any form of harassment of journalists covering the elections.

Any of the officials in charge of the desk can be reached by call and messaging (including WhatsApp) as follows:

THE ADVISORY

In line with the objectives highlighted above, this advisory is divided into two parts - Safety and Ethics and Professionalism.

1. SAFETY

a. Before Election Day

- ❖ Be prepared: Accredited journalists should anticipate risks and find out as much as they can about the terrain they will cover on election day, especially the security situation. This will help them to put in place risk mitigation measures.
- ❖ Don't ignore signals: Accredited journalists should factor early warning signals of threat to election security or possible violence into their preparation. In this regard, they should carefully study the reports of the law enforcement and security agencies and civil society organisations working on election security.
- ❖ Mind your health: Accredited journalists should prior to election day create time for basic medical check-up. Those with underlying health conditions are advised to confide in their management who will determine the best way they can be deployed, if at all they would, on election day.

- ❖ Have means of identification ready: All accredited journalists should make sure to collect their accreditation tags from INEC offices in the states where they would be on election duty.
- ❖ Arm yourself with contacts: Accredited journalists should obtain the contact details of the national secretariat and state chapters of the Nigeria Union of Journalists (NUJ) and other umbrella media professional bodies/associations; the Police commissioners and spokespersons of the State Police Commands and the INEC resident electoral commissioners in the states they will be covering the elections for necessary contact in case of attacks/threats or emergency.

b. On Election Day

- ❖ Be sure to be fit: Accredited journalists on medications must ensure they take them as necessary and generally do last-minute check-up before setting out.
- ❖ Dress smart: Accredited journalists should ensure they are smartly dressed to make walking or running easy should occasion demand such.
- ❖ Make identification easy: Accredited journalists should have their INEC accreditation tags and additionally have on them their organisational or professional body identity cards for easy identification should the law enforcement security and security agents require such.

- ❖ Take care of your communication gadgets: Accredited journalists should make sure their phones are fully charged and loaded with sufficient credit and data to avoid sudden disruption in communication especially in moments of emergency.
- ❖ Be brave and smart: Accredited journalists should make sure they cover from reasonable distance to make retreat possible if the situation gets rough, there is mob action and violence occurs.
- ❖ Do not walk or move alone: Accredited journalists should as much as possible move in groups or in clusters. It is much easier to attack a person than a group of persons.
- ❖ Be non-partisan: Accredited journalists should not put on any insignia of the political parties or get distracted from their professional responsibility by exhibiting bias in favour of any political party or getting caught in partisan public discussion.
- ❖ Maintain integrity: Accredited journalists should not negotiate with any politician to suppress the news or collect bribes to publish stories. These may come to hunt you.

- ❖ Never lose touch: Accredited journalists should constantly be in touch with close relatives and friends and create a safety alert response that allows immediate contact with them in case of attacks/threats.
- ❖ Have a good plan: Accredited journalists should try to stick to their planned route if driving or being driven, avoid travelling at night and generally stay in regular touch with their news desk or other colleagues.
- ❖ Don't announce un-authorized results: Accredited journalists should refrain from declaring a candidate or candidates' winners before the election management body – INEC - does so. This indeed is an offence under the Electoral Act 2022.
- ❖ Do not be silent: Accredited journalists should not keep silent but promptly report any suspicious movement around them, threats or attacks.

2. ETHICS AND PROFESSIONALISM

The Nigerian Media Code of Election Coverage describes journalists as “the key purveyor of information on the electoral processes”, which makes it imperative for them to adopt best professional and ethical standards and imbibe the principles of conflict-sensitive journalism in the reporting of the general elections.

To this end, all journalists and other media professionals on election duty should:

- ❖ Report the elections in a fair and balanced manner;
- ❖ Report only factual electoral information;
- ❖ Verify any allegation made against a party, candidate or any other interest before publishing while reflecting as many sides to the dispute as possible;
- ❖ Report the views of candidates and political parties directly and in their own words, while exercising necessary professional discretion, rather than as they are interpreted by others;
- ❖ Not solicit or accept bribes or make other pecuniary demands from parties and candidates to publish or suppress reports;
- ❖ Not use or display any insignia of candidates and parties in the course of professional duty;
- ❖ Verify the facts and information contained in press releases and media briefings;
- ❖ Avoid the publication of fake news and refrain from disseminating misinformation or disinformation.

This publication has been produced under the IPC Centre for Safety and Protection of Journalists (ICSPJ), established by the International Press Centre (IPC) to address the growing number of attacks and threats against journalists in Nigeria.

Through its SPJ Hub, the center monitors press freedom violations and launches initiatives like training and advocacy to protect journalists, particularly those covering sensitive issues like elections and protests.
